His Wife Says Illness Had Unbalanced His Mind.

But There Are Rumors that He Had Premeditated Suicide.

Benjamin W. Buchanan, the aged court who has been a court officer for half a ours, committed suicide at 41.30 this morning by cutting his throat with a razor and then jumping from the roof of his residence then jumping from the root of his residence at 108 Washington place to the pavement, after he jumped, but was unable to

His body was removed by an ambulance from St. Vincent's Hospital a quarter of an bour after he died.

Mr. Buchanan was seventy-three years old age, on the top Boor of the building. He had been suffering from dyspepsia for swerel months, and a day or so ago told his wife he thought he could never be cured. rtly after 6 o'clock this morning he told Mrs. Buchanan he was going to the roof to If the fresh air would belp him.

A few moments later he jumped to the evenuent. His throat was cut from ear to . On the roof was found the razor he had car. On the roof was found the razor he had used and the case from which he had taken it. There was a trait of blood from the piace where he cut his throat leading to the edge of the roof.

Ars. Buchanan believes sickness preyed on her husband's mind until he became irresponsible for his actions. Friends say he thought age would soon force him to quit work and that he believed a man who was not useful should not live.

He had made a will a short time ago, and when he left the Court-House Weunesday he shoot hands with all his as-oclates. The fact is also recalled that he wanted to borrow a revolver.

There was an air of gloom among all the efficers in the Supreme Court Building this morning on account of the death of Old Ben, as Mr. Buchanan was called. He was a favortie of all, but more particularly of William H. Bickets, the Court Crier.

"The first I knew of Ben," said Mr. Rickets, "he was a butcher s boy in Centre Market. He was a member of the Volunteer Fire Benniument and rau with Engine 40. In this way he became acquainted with the politicians and was appointed a Court officer about nity years ago.

Wide Ends. We here quote from the New York "Herald" of Oct. 4, 1892:

"There are many attractions offered in the Big Jewelry Store of Casperfeld & Co., of No. 144 Howery. There is a remarkably fine assortment of diamonds and o her rare gems, in thoroughly artistic settings, at prices that seem ridiculously low to persons who are accustomed to uptown values. These low prices have had a singular effect on the trade in general. For it has become known that this firm is selling brilliants at prices that are phenomenally low, and the results have been that dealers are beginning to buy from them rather than from the importers. Certainly with a record like this persons who desire to find bargains in jewelry should call at this store and inspect the stock."
